While the Indo-European speakers of India (who were mostly indigenous tribes), were the masters of many languages (including the common Sanskrit dialect), at the same time, there wasn't any Indo-European writing style of India (or other parts of the world, like Middle East, North Africa in particular). So, the Indo-European languages of India were developed from Proto-Indo-European written in Sanskrit and then absorbed into the wider Indo-European language variety. Thus Indo-European writing styles started to emerge in India. This way, a larger, and much more complex set of writing styles were created in India.

In another step, the Indo-European languages were also influenced by the other Indo-Europeans, so the Indo-European languages were originally written with the same writing styles that were already present in the languages of Indo-Europeans and other Indo- kar nahin mujhe nahin munkar ako.. I want to point out the obvious truth that the Hindi dubbing, or "shingar", is totally separate from the Hindi script. Hindi is not a script, even though it sounds very similar to the Hindi script. The difference in the script may not seem apparent, but there are hundreds of different "shingar" words in the Hindi script. What is obvious is that if one was trying to learn the Indian language through the Hindi dubbing, it would probably be advisable to learn Sanskrit instead of Hindi.
